God asks us to love him with all our heart, mind, soul, and strength. On the suggestion of several competent authorities a Conclusion, following the lines of the Interchapters, is now added. It is sufficient to be convinced, if what philosophers say be true, that we are not to seek any motive merely from without; but that there is the same [unseen] motive in all cases, which moves us to do or forbear any action; to speak or not to speak; to be elated or depressed; to avoid or pursue: that very impulse which hath now moved us two; you, to come, and sit and hear me; and me, to speak as I .
